

The Rhodesian Command Dakota by Laurence Hill.

ORAFs congratulates Laurence (Flo) Hill on the release of his new book, The Rhodesian Command Dakota.

The book written by RhAF member Laurence Hill (affectionately known as Flo) who was based in Comcen. The book covers the Rhodesian Command Dakota which was kept very under wraps during the war. Many books have been written covering personal experiences during the conflict between Communist inspired Insurgents, and Rhodesian Security Forces, during the period 1965 to 1980. Most have just been a listing of factual information. In "The Rhodesian Command Dakota," Flo relates his unique experiences, as part of a very select minority, due to the sensitive and highly classified nature of their task. His first-hand account provides a deeper insight into what other writers, covering the same period, have been unable to do. The story is well written, interesting, and entertaining, enhanced by excellent photographs, and a fair amount of humour. Those who enjoy a good war story, with a difference, will be impressed.

The book is available in paperback and available in Kindle format from Amazon.
